DETAILED ACTION

 Claims 1-29 have been presented for examination based on appeal brief filed on 7th December 2006.

 Claims 1-29 are now allowable based on the decision rendered by Board of Patent Appeals and Interference on 3rd March 2008.

Allowable Subject Matter

- The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: Please see decision provided by the Board for reasons of allowance.
- 4. The patentable feature of the instant invention are (a) generating an initial frequency-passband model of the subsurface earth volume for at least one frequency passband and assigning values for at least one rock property in each initial frequency-passband mode (See id. at Figs. 2, 3 and 5A; page 8, ¶ 0021 to page 9, ¶ 0024; page 11, ¶ 0027 to page 12, ¶ 0028; page 15, ¶ 0037 to page 16, ¶ 0039). After that initial frequency- passband models are combined to form an initial complete three-dimensional geologic model of the subsurface earth volume; and optimizing the initial complete three-dimensional geologic model by perturbing the rock property values in at least one of the models according to specified geological criteria. See id. at Figs. 4, 5A-5B; page 12, ¶ 0029 to page 14, ¶ 0034; page 16, ¶ 0040 to page 23, ¶ 0056.
- 5. Instant application points to deficiencies in the prior art (Specification: [0017]-[0018])

Application/Control Number: 09/934,320 Art Unit: 2128

[0017]

Most prior art geologic-modeling technologies fail to recognize that different data types used in constructing the model contain information at different scales and frequency content. This deficiency is particularly true when integrating seismic information into the geologic model. Seismic-amplitude data do not contain significant low-frequency information. As a consequence of omitting this information, seismic data do not directly measure absolute rock property values nor generally measure slowly varying trends in these properties, e.g., as a result of buril compaction. For example, seismic data may be used to estimate porosity values within a reservoir, though these values may be strongly influenced by a slowly varying compaction trend. Direct integration of these estimates into the model without also integrating the low-frequency information will lead to fraccuracies.

Seismic-amplitude data also do not contain significant high-frequency information. As a consequence of omitting this information, seismic data measures properties over volumes of the subsurface which are much coarser than that measured by well data. For example, most prior-art geologic-modeling techniques assume that the rock-properties estimated from the seismic data and integrated into the geologic model represent a volume that is no different than that measured by the well data. If these estimated properties are integrated directly into the geologic model, the result might not properly reflect the high-frequency heterogeneity that occurs in the reservoir and that affects simulated fluid flow.

Etgen teaches using seismic data, and merely suggest using data from other sources with no indication of how the data should be combined (hence the inaccuracies as predicted by instant specification [0017]). The patentable feature of the instant invention is that frequency passband model is constructed from various data types representing various weighted bands of frequencies (See Specification Fig.2 & [0022]; [0029] - weights) and rock properties are assigned to this initial frequency passband model according to statistics and desired rock properties (Specification [0023]).

Etgen fails to construct the above composite weighted frequency passband model and seems to assign rock properties directly to the velocity data (Etgen: Fig.3A). Gelfand also does not integrate well and seismic data and teach the patentable limitations above.

6. Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."

Relevance of Cited Prior Art

7. U.S. Patent Publication 20030115029 teaches generating a geologic model which incorporates a local spatial trend in rock property continuity. Initially, a candidate geologic model is generated by assigning a rock-property value to each block of a model grid. Next, local spectra which characterize the desired local spatial trend in rock property continuity are specified. These local spectra are used to frequency scale the rock-property values of the candidate geologic model. The scaled rock-property values are then combined to generate a scaled geologic model that incorporates the local spatial trend in rock property continuity.
